DAVID CAMPESE

David Campese is a household name in rugby. He is one of the greatest and most entertaining rugby players to have ever graced the rugby field. Representing Australia for 15 years and New South Wales for 11 years and, until recently, held the world record for the most tries in a test match (64) for 15 years.

David was the first man in Australian history to play more than 100 tests for his country. He has received numerous awards since his retirement from rugby, including 1991 RWC Player of the Tournament, Rugby Centurions Award, Induction into the International Rugby Hall of Fame, being made an AM of Australia.

Despite having retired 15 years ago, David's resounding impact on the game is still evident in his controversial yet consistently accurate opinion on the game which continues to entertain and resonate throughout the international rugby world.
